LEARN ABOUT INDIGENOUS CONNECTIONS

ROCKY MOUNTAIN HOUSE
NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE

JASPER
NATIONAL PARK

The Métis of Canada helped form 19th-century alliances between First Nations communities and the Hudson's Bay and North West companies, longtime competitors during the fur trade. Immerse yourself in the history of daily life at Rocky Mountain House, visit Jasper National Park to star-gaze and learn about Indigenous connections to these lands.

IF YOU'RE A DAY TRIPPER

Your day adventure draws upon what truly makes Rocky Mountain House National Historic Site so personally enriching: the deep imprint left through one-on-one storytelling with the site's Métis and First Nations interpretive staff. Two favourite learning opportunities include Indigenous Traditional Games, where the site's interpreters teach essential skills, such as observation, intuition, and hand-eye coordination, and the Dream Catcher Workshop, where you will create your own masterpiece with hoops, feathers and beads.

IF YOU'RE AN OVERNIGHTER

Immerse yourself further into Métis and First Nations history and cultures and learn details about the two companies competing for the fur trade and their Indigenous partners. Participate in the Traditional Games or Dream Catcher Workshop, or make advance reservations for other heritage interpretation programs, such as the Drum and Song demonstration, a fireside experience featuring a local Indigenous drummer and storyteller.

Stay onsite in an authentic Métis Trapper Tent in Rocky Mountain House and sleep soundly in these canvas, wood-framed homes used in settlements or along traplines. It holds up to 5 people and includes a Fur Trade Camp Kit, complete with bison hide, period cooking kit, utensils, and flint/steel fire-starting kit, bannock mix, trapper's tea, spices, oil and soap. Authentic Tipis and Trapline Cabins are also available on site.

IF YOU'RE A WEEKENDER

DAY 1: Choose your favourite experiences at Rocky Mountain House National Historic Site, including an overnight stay in a trapper tent, tipi, or trapline cabin.

DAY 2: Explore Rocky Mountain House's hiking and biking trails, such as the David Thompson Trail (3.2 km loop), a tranquil, restorative and close to nature hike near the North Saskatchewan River. A must-visit is the Follow the Bison Herd interpretive station where stories of Indigenous Peoples following the movement of bison, and how bison are integral to their cultures and way of life, are shared.

End your day by driving 330 km to the townsite in Jasper National Park and take part in one of two evening programs. Option 1 is a Dark Sky watching experience at the Jasper Planetarium, which includes aspects of Alberta's Indigenous culture. Option 2, the Wapakwanis Plant Walk, is an enriching evening event by a fire with a knowledge-keeper who shares a deeper understanding of Indigenous life through traditional foods and medicines, as well as story-telling, singing and drumming, and the opportunity to learn beautiful phrases in Cree, and other languages which the Métis may speak.

DAY 3: On your final day, consider a visit to the Jasper Yellowhead Museum and Archives, which houses various fur trade-related objects, and other artifacts that help explain historic activity and trade in the area.

Sign up for Jasper Tour Company's Maligne Valley Adventure with Métis owner and guide Joe Urie, take in the sheer beauty of the sacred place the Stoney Nakoda People refer to as 'Chaba Imne' but what the settlers came to call 'Maligne' Lake.

CONSERVING FOR THE FUTURE

THE CHALLENGE

How can we protect communities from wildfires and support healthier landscapes that are resilient to climate change?

As climate changes, wildfire seasons are predicted to become longer, larger and more severe. More droughts create drier and more flammable conditions.

A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

Fire has been reintroduced to Mountain National Parks through prescribed fire and wildfire management. Prescribed fires are intentionally lit to benefit the ecosystem and protect communities.

These fires reduce the buildup of dense trees and help restore native meadows and grasslands. The previously burned areas also reduce the spread and growth of wildfire in the future.

THE RESULT

Prescribed fires diversify landscapes and improve ecosystem resilience. This gives forests and ecosystems the chance to recover and persist even with the impacts of climate change. They also result in food sources for grizzly bears, habitats for a wide range of species, and fire breaks for communities.

GET INVOLVED NOW IT'S YOUR TURN

COLLECT WILDFLOWER AND NATIVE GRASS SEED

Restore the native habitat of flowering plants! Assist staff and help collect native plant seeds, or transplant native grasses and other plants throughout the park.

Waterton Lakes National Park in Alberta

GARRY OAK RESTORATION

Contribute to Parks Canada's important work and help restore one of the rarest ecosystems in Canada. What will you be doing? Pulling weeds out of the ground and sorting and planting Camas bulbs and seedlings!

Fort Rodd Hill and Fisgard Lighthouse National Historic Sites in British Columbia

RECORD YOUR NATURE OBSERVATIONS

Record all your plant or animal observations using the iNaturalist app. If you see any endangered whitebark or limber pine trees in the Mountain National Parks, add them in the app! This helps researchers who use the data understand where they grow, and which trees are infected by blister rust.

BISON GOLDEN HOUR

Fall in Elk Island National Park in Alberta is really beautiful; the leaves are turning yellow and catching a sunrise or sunset is easier than in summer. Venturing through the bison loop is a nice addition to my day either first thing in the morning or on my way home, especially when the air is crisp and the light is making everything look golden on the open plain and surrounding trees.

FISHING FRONT ROW

Having the chance to go out to our Parks Canada chairs at Gulf of Georgia Cannery in BC and gaze at an active fishing dock is one of my favourite parts of this site. When we talk about our history it is sometimes easy to forget that this fishing industry is still alive and important today. Having the opportunity to see that industry in action makes this spot so special and I am so grateful to experience it every day!

SEA GARDENS

The most memorable experience I've had in the Gulf Islands National Park Reserve in BC was participating in the Sea Garden Restoration Project at Fulford Harbour on Salt Spring Island. It was an amazing experience learning about the history and cultural significance of the sea garden rock wall, as well as helping restore it for future generations.

5,000 VINTAGE SPECIMENS

The Banff Park Museum National Historic Site in Alberta is renowned for its 5,000 vintage natural history specimens. While most visitors are drawn to the bison, wolves, and other large animal exhibits, I'm fascinated with the diminutive items in the collection, including small birds, insects, and the teeny hummingbird eggs.

SUMMER RETREAT

Fort Rodd Hill in BC saw generations of soldiers training to fight in the world wars or to stand guard protecting Canada's west coast. During peacetime, families of soldiers camped inside the fort to be close to their loved ones. With the oTENTik overnight stay and the opportunity to step back in time, I am touched to know families continue to create lasting memories.

KOOTENAY FOSSILS REVEALED

The Burgess Shale guided hike in Kootenay National Park in BC is a must-do for me! The hike has scenic views in all directions, but what I really go for are the fossils. I love sifting through the shale beds to reveal fossils older than dinosaurs! It's incredible to hold history in the palm of your hand and know it has been here for over 500 million years!
